The main idea of this project is an online Food and Grocery delivery system in the rural areas of India, currently focused in Moodbidri town and its surroundings located in Karnataka, India. We aim to buy the products from farmers who grow crops organically and thereby ensuring pesticide free fruits and vegetables to our customers and help the rural farmers market.

The project also aims to increase internet usage in rural India and make things available for them at their door steps because mobility is a major problem faced by the rural India.

THIS start-up by an engineering student from Alva's College intends to generate jobs as well as extend a helping hand to students hailing from poor economic background, inspiring many young entrepreneurs in and around Moodbidri.

Vivek Alva says that hard work and taking risks always helps a person grow. "We must not run away from challenges. Instead, we need to face them head-on. I wish that Homza Cart also becomes as success-

Homza Cart is an online delivery service, where one can order food, daily items such as grocery, cosmetics, bakery, fruits etc. As of now, the service is available to customers from Moodbidri and Mijaru area between 6 am to 9 pm. From those customers who buy items worth more than ₹ 1,000, the company will utilise a part of the money earned for the welfare of underprivileged children who have missed out on education.

Srajan, speaking to TNIE says that his parents Devdas V J and Shirley have supported him in his venture. "Youth must become entrepreneurs, generate employment opportunities and work for the welfare of the poor," he says.
